Online safety - child exploitation does not stop over the summer

While many people will be hoping to enjoy the summer outside away from the screens and technology indoors, it's important to remember online safety. Smartphones go everywhere with us and exploiters don't take a summer holiday.

From the 11-18 July the Essex Safeguarding Children Board (ESCB) and partners are encouraging people across Essex to take part in sharing messages across social media. The ESCB have partnered with Brook Essex who have recorded a new podcast aimed at young people around the topic of consent - it's a really important listen and people are encouraged to share with young people they know. Brook Essex will also be facilitating a Facebook Live event aimed at parents and carers on Wednesday 14 July at 6pm.

The week of activity will also cover topics including online gaming, youth involved sexual images and online safety for pre-schoolers, giving parents and carers the information they need to support their child to safely navigate the online world, whether they are primary age or secondary age. The 2 Johns will be hosting their regular Q&A session on Facebook to launch the week of activity on Sunday 11 July at 6pm.

The ESCB website has resources for parents, carers and professionals including podcasts, videos, how to report concerns and information about spotting the signs of exploitation. Signs of exploitation include a young person having more money, being secretive or getting taxis everywhere, as well as receiving online commodities such as game currency and other gifts within games.

It is important to remember exploitation is not the child's fault and they are never to blame. By creating a supportive environment, where online safety is discussed in the same way as road safety or stranger danger, children will feel more able to speak openly about concerns they may have.

David Archibald, ESCB Independent Chair/Facilitator on behalf of the Statutory Partners said: “Online exploitation is a terrible crime which can have a significant impact on the lives of the individuals, families and communities involved. I am pleased that we are continuing this campaign, along with our partners, to support parents and carers to recognise the signs of exploitation, which are often hidden. Together we can support young people and families to be aware of the dangers and know where to go if they’re concerned.”

Concerns about child exploitation can be reported anonymously via Crimestoppers 0800 555111. There is also a dedicated Police Child Exploitation hotline - for parents, carers and members of the public to seek advice around concerns they may have about their own or other children with regards to criminal and sexual exploitation: 01245 452058.
